

Daily Rituals Style Guide

Daily Rituals (dailyrituals.uk) — Visual Style Reference

Source: homepage + blog post screenshots, dailyrituals.uk (UK wellness/self-care/biohacking blog for women), reviewed July 2026.

1. The Vibe

Polished-but-unfiltered big-sister energy. It reads like a trend-obsessed friend's group chat that got a magazine layout: candid bathroom-mirror selfies and grainy phone shots sit next to classic serif headlines and clean grid layouts. Editorial structure, TikTok/Pinterest moodboard content.

One-liner: elevated girl-next-door meets glossy wellness mag.

2. Color Palette

Role	Color	Approx. hex*
Primary brand color	Deep forest / hunter green	#16302A – #1B3328
Background	Warm off-white / white	#FFFFFF – #FDFCFA
Headline text	Near-black	#1A1A1A
Secondary text / eyebrow labels	Warm grey	#8A8A85
Recurring photo accents (not fixed brand colors, but show up constantly in imagery)	Terracotta/coral red, blush pink, mustard gold	—

*Estimated by eye from screenshots — pull exact hex with an eyedropper on the live site if you need pixel-perfect values.

Usage pattern: the deep green is the one bold color in the whole system — it's the button fill, the footer/newsletter block background, the logo wordmark, and the background of Instagram quote-card graphics. Everything else is neutral (black/white/grey), so the green reads as “the brand color” every time it shows up.

3. Typography

Three-font system, each with a distinct job:

Script/display (logo + emotional headlines): an elegant, flowing calligraphic script. Used for the “Daily Rituals” wordmark, “Get your Wellness Dose ” banner copy, and headline text inside Instagram graphics. Closest free/Google-Fonts equivalents: Beloved Script, Alex Brush, Herr Von Muellerhoff, or Windsong.

Editorial serif (article headlines, H2s): a classic high-contrast serif with visible thick/thin strokes. Closest equivalents: Playfair Display, Lora, or Libre Caslon Text.

Monospace (nav, category eyebrows, buttons): uppercase, wide letter-spacing, fixed-width characters. Used for the main nav (“NEWSLETTER TRENDING WELLNESS SELF CARE RETREATS”), category tags above headlines (“SELF CARE”, “TRENDING”), and CTA button labels (“READ MORE”). Closest equivalents: Space Mono, IBM Plex Mono, Courier Prime.

Sans-serif (body copy, footer links): clean, geometric, no-frills. Closest equivalents: Jost, Poppins, Work Sans.

Pairing rule of thumb: script for the one big emotional flourish, serif for headlines, mono for anything structural/UI, sans for reading copy.

4. Layout & UI Patterns

- Sharp corners everywhere. No rounded cards, no drop shadows. (The one exception: the homepage newsletter signup uses a rounded pill-shaped email field.)
- Full-bleed photography paired with generous white space — images are never boxed in with padding or borders.
- Featured articles: large image on one side, text block on the other (image often takes 55-60% of the width).
- List/grid sections (“Most Read”, “Trending Now”, “You’ll Also Love”): 3-column card grid, image on top, category eyebrow + serif headline below, no card borders.

- Every headline gets a small uppercase mono category eyebrow directly above it (e.g. “WELLNESS”, “TRENDING”).
- Section headers get a small centered black underline/divider beneath them (see “You’ll Also Love”).
- CTA buttons: solid deep green fill, rectangular (sharp corners), white uppercase mono text, generous letter-spacing.
- Social icons: minimal line-icon glyphs inside thin circle outlines, black on white.
- Footer: deep green “Get on the List” block up top, then a plain white multi-column link footer (EXPLORE / INFO / ON THE BLOG), then a strip of Instagram thumbnails at the very bottom.

5. Photography & Image Style

This is the most distinctive part of the brand — do not swap in generic stock photography.

- Grain is deliberate and constant. Nearly every photo has a visible film-grain/noise texture layered on top. Nothing looks smooth or over-retouched.
- Warm, high-contrast color grading. Skin tones are pushed warm and rosy rather than neutral or cool.
- Candid “get ready with me” energy. Bathroom mirror selfies, hands mid-skincare-routine, half-finished vanity shots, phone visible in frame — never a posed studio portrait.
- Collage/moodboard framing. Many hero images layer 2-4 photos into a single frame (e.g. a mirror selfie + a product shot + a phone screen combined), rather than one clean single image.
- Product flatlays are styled loosely on fabric, tile, or pastel floral backdrops — not sterile studio backgrounds.
- Instagram graphics break format entirely: solid deep-green background with a short punchy line of script + sans text overlaid in white (e.g. “be Addicted to real dopamine,” “getting prepped for Hot Girl summer”) — like a relatable meme/quote card, not a photo.

6. Brand Voice (for context, not the focus of this kit)

Tagline: “Your dose of what’s hot in wellness, self-care and biohacking.” Tone from actual post copy: direct, funny, a little confessional (“I’ve suffered with my skin since I was a teen...”), name-drops trends and celebrities, uses “&” instead of “and,” asks rhetorical questions to hook the reader, never hedges.

Note: colors and font names above are best-effort visual matches from screenshots, not values pulled directly from the site’s CSS. If you need exact hex codes or the actual licensed font names, inspect the live site’s stylesheet or ask for a fresh screenshot to re-check.
